In Iep Jaltok, Jetnil-Kijiner addresses global issues like climate change and migration through poems that offer a first-hand glimpse into a country and people little known by the outside despite historical ties to other Pacific Islands, Asia, Europe and America. Through her powerful spoken word performances and as an advocate for climate justice, Jetnil-Kijiner has garnered global recognition. Now she offers her own open basket of treasures for readers to discover. Kindle-Shop. Wählen Sie die Abteilung aus, in der Sie suchen möchten. She'll often weave Marshallese legends, history and traditions into the poems, as well as science and statistics, and her own experiences."— The International Examiner "This moving debut should be admired, relished, and read in classrooms far and wide. It was early morning and I was half asleep, but the poem got its hooks in me, and as soon as she finished, I went to the Living on Earth website so I could read it and hear it again, and from there to Kathy Jetnil-Kijiner's website, and from there to buying this book. These poems are so moving.
