The ship's four twin turrets, each containing two 12 inch Mark B.VIII* guns were constructed under contract 121G by Vickers at Barrow-in-Furness although the hull was built by John Brown & Co on Clydebank. Each turret cost £59,123 and their total cost was £236,494, yielding a substantial profit for Vickers. by Ian Johnston & Ian Buxton The battleship as a case study for how it's made. And why, and by whom. A good, important, useful big-picture book even if the actual pictures are too, too small.
